14th, Rambouillet:

(To Maximilian Joseph, King of Bavaria.) My Brother: f war should break out, your troops must be employed 'igorously. The Prince Royal, however distinguished he aay Ixj by his natural gifts, has never conducted military iperations, and is therefore not competent to command, should l>e depriving myself of the services of your 40,000 mm if I had riot a firm and able commander at their icad. I have selected an old soldier, the Duke of Dantzig, or this duty, At this day the Bavarian army is too large, ind the circumstances too serious, for me to speak less han frankly to Your Majesty. After the Prince Royal uis won his promotions through six or seven campaigns, ie will Iw fit to command.

»8d, Paris:

A French officer has IXHIU stopped at Braunau, and his lispatclui.H, though waled with the arms of France, have >een forcibly taken by the Austrian*!.

84 Ih. All the infantry of the Guard coming from Spain vill proceed to Paris by coach.

3()th. My intention is to carry my headquarters to ilatwbon and to concentrate my whole army there.

April 10th. Intercepted dispatches addressed to M. de Vfotternich, and his demand for passports, show clearly plough that Austria is on the point of beginning hostili-.ie.s, if she has not already done so; if she attacks before ,he 15th everything must fall back on the Lech, 12th. (To the I'rince of NeuchAtcl.) The semaphore is iuHt giving me, at 8 p. M., the first half of your dispatch, from which it would appear, according to a letter of M, Dtto, that the Austrian^ have crossed the Inn and declared war, I shall start in two hours.
